ISSUES PRESENTED

Can a business—here, an Internet-based payday loan company exacting triple-digit interest rates from its customers—establish tribal sovereign immunity, and thus avoid enforcement of California’s consumer protection laws, simply by making a showing that it is formally affiliated with a federally recognized Indian tribe?

May a court look behind the evidence of formal tribal affiliation to determine whether the tribe exercises actual control, management and oversight of the business and, if not, reject the business’s assertion of tribal sovereign immunity on that basis?

PETITION FOR REVIEW

Appellant, the People of the State of California, respectfully petitions this Court for review of the published decision of Division Seven of the Second District Court of Appeal in People of the State of California v. Miami Nation Enterprises, et al. (B242644) (People v. MNE), filed on January 21, 2014.¹ A copy of the slip opinion is attached. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 8.504(b).)

WHY REVIEW IS NECESSARY

This Court’s review is necessary to secure uniformity of decision and to settle an important question of law concerning the test for determining under what circumstances a business entity is an “arm of the tribe” and, therefore, entitled to invoke the tribe’s sovereign immunity from suit.

Immunity is an important and inherent part of tribal sovereignty that protects tribal governmental and commercial activities both on and off tribal lands. Legitimate arm-of-the-tribe businesses, controlled by a tribal government and operated for the benefit of the tribe, are immune from state law enforcement. The practical effects of extending sovereign immunity to businesses that are affiliated with a tribe on paper, but in fact operate with little or no tribal control or oversight, can be seen in the abuses in the payday lending industry. Under the test applied by the Second Appellate District, the State is unable to protect or assist vulnerable consumers harmed by payday lenders claiming immunity as arms of tribes. Further, California-licensed payday lenders are at a competitive disadvantage as compared to lenders claiming immunity from state consumer protection laws as arms of tribes. A core function of California’s sovereignty is thus at stake in this case—the State’s legitimate exercise of authority to protect the interests of all of its businesses and residents through enforcement of its laws.

Review is necessary in this case for two closely related reasons. First, review is warranted to resolve a conflict between two appellate districts regarding when a tribally affiliated entity qualifies as an arm of a tribe such that it enjoys the tribe's sovereign immunity. The test adopted by the Second Appellate District in this case is based solely on organizational formalities and is essentially limited to a facial examination of the formal indicia of the business entity's affiliation with the tribe. The test previously developed by the Court of Appeal for the Fourth Appellate District, in contrast, is fact-based, and properly considers, among other factors, the tribe's actual control over the business entity. Without review by this Court, application of the competing arm-of-the-tribe tests in California may result in dramatically different outcomes, depending on which test a court applies.

Second, review is warranted to settle the important question of whether the arm-of-the-tribe test should provide reasonable limits on the extension of sovereign immunity to businesses. Without this Court's intervention, the rule announced by the Court of Appeal in this case could encourage the creation of shell companies selling a variety of regulated financial products—including mortgages, insurance and loans—over the Internet without important consumer protections provided by California law. With the proper paperwork, these companies would be shielded from state enforcement by tribal sovereign immunity, even where the tribe does not exercise actual control and oversight. Review will allow this Court to articulate an appropriate arm-of-the-tribe test that ensures that only businesses operating under meaningful tribal control and oversight benefit from sovereign immunity.

SUMMARY OF THE FACTS AND OF THE COURT OF APPEAL'S DECISION

In 2006, the California Department of Corporations ordered several Internet payday advance lenders (Payday Lenders) to stop their unlicensed and unlawful activities in California.² (Opn., at p. 2.) The Payday Lenders engaged in egregious, deceptive, and exploitive practices in violation of California law. They charged annual interest rates and fees in excess of 1,000 percent,³ illegally renewed loans multiple times, and used threats and other unlawful techniques to collect loan payments. (Opening Brief (OB), p. 4; Reply Brief, pp. 2-4.) In 2007, when the Payday Lenders failed to obey the Department's desist and refrain order, the Commissioner, on behalf of the People of the State of California, filed her complaint in this matter. (Opn., at p. 2.)

² The California Corporations Commissioner was formerly the Chief Officer and head of the Department. (Corp. Code, § 25600.) The Department licenses and regulates a variety of financial services including, but not limited to, payday lenders. (See Fin. Code, §§ 23005, subd. (a) [licensing], 23015 [rules and regulations].) The Department of Corporations merged with the Department of Financial Institutions on July 1, 2013, and became the Department of Business Oversight. (Fin. Code, § 321, subds. (b) & (c).)

Two businesses, Miami Nation Enterprises (MNE) and SFS, Inc. (SFS), specially appeared and jointly moved to quash the service of summons and to dismiss the complaint. (Opn., at p. 3.) MNE was formed under the laws of the Miami Tribe of Oklahoma (also known as the Miami Nation) and is wholly owned by the Miami Nation. (Id. at p. 8.) SFS was incorporated under the laws of the Santee Sioux Nation (also formerly known as the Santee Sioux Tribe of Nebraska) and is wholly owned by the Santee Sioux Nation. (Id. at p. 7.)

MNE and SFS stated that they did business under the Payday Lenders' trademarked names, that MNE and SFS were owned and operated by two federally recognized tribes, and that they were entitled to the tribes' sovereign immunity.⁴ (Opn., at pp. 3, 4.) The superior court denied MNE and SFS's motion and granted the People's request for a preliminary injunction. (Opn., at p. 4.) MNE and SFS jointly filed a petition for review, which the Court of Appeal summarily denied. (Ibid.) This Court granted MNE and SFS's petition and transferred the matter to the Court of Appeal with directions to vacate its order denying review and issue an alternative writ. (Ibid; see also Ameriloan v. Superior Court (Ameriloan) (2008) 169 Cal.App.4th 81, 86-88 [detailing case's procedural history].)

In a published opinion, the Court of Appeal remanded the matter to the superior court with directions to conduct an evidentiary hearing. (Ameriloan, supra, 169 Cal.App.4th at p. 101.) The superior court was directed to determine whether the Payday Lenders were sufficiently related to the tribes to be entitled to the benefit of their sovereign immunity under the criteria articulated in Trudgeon v. Fantasy Springs Casino (Trudgeon) (1999) 71 Cal.App.4th 632, and Redding Rancheria v. Superior Court of Shasta County (Redding Rancheria) (2001) 88 Cal.App.4th 384. (Id. at p. 98.) The Court of Appeal also authorized the parties to conduct limited discovery pertinent to subject matter jurisdiction. (Id. at pp. 98-99.)

Outside of the discovery process, the People obtained extensive evidence from the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) and other sources regarding the financial relationships among the Payday Lenders, MNE, SFS, and the affiliated tribes.⁵ This evidence revealed that third parties had operated the Internet payday lending businesses for years before seeking to shield their activities through affiliation with the tribes; that the third parties sought tribal affiliation only after attracting the regulatory attention of several concerned states; and that, once affiliated, the tribes did not control the day-to-day operations of the Internet payday lending activities and received only a small percentage of the income from their operations. (Opn., at pp. 9-10.) Further, the evidence showed that the Payday Lenders' activities violated the tribes' own laws. (OB, at pp. 11-12.)

The superior court held an evidentiary hearing; determined that MNE and SFS functioned as arms of the tribes for the purposes of tribal sovereign immunity; and on that basis granted the two entities' joint motion to quash service and dismiss the action for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. (Opn., at pp. 7, 10.) On January 21, 2014, the Court of Appeal issued a published opinion affirming the superior court's dismissal. (Id. at pp. 2, 10.) The Court of Appeal's decision relied primarily on formal indicia of MNE's and SFS's organizational structure and relationship with the tribes and discounted evidence that their activities were largely controlled by third parties and violated tribal law and their own organizational documents. (See Opn., at pp. 22-24.)

LEGAL DISCUSSION

REVIEW IS NEEDED TO RESOLVE A CONFLICT BETWEEN THE DISTRICT COURTS OF APPEAL AND TO ESTABLISH A UNIFORM TEST TO DETERMINE WHEN A BUSINESS ENJOYS TRIBAL SOVEREIGN IMMUNITY

Under federal law, Indian tribes enjoy sovereign immunity from suits based on their governmental and commercial activities. (Trudgeon, supra, 71 Cal.App.4th at pp. 636-637, citing Kiowa Tribe of Okla. v.

Manufacturing Technologies, Inc. (1998) 523 U.S. 751.) A tribally related business entity has no immunity of its own—it has immunity only if the tribe’s immunity is extended to it. (Trudgeon, supra, 71 Cal.App.4th at pp. 636-637.) A tribe’s immunity “does not cover tribally chartered corporations that are completely independent of the tribe”; it extends only to entities that are so closely linked to the tribe that they qualify to be treated as, in legal effect, the tribe itself. (Agua Caliente Band of Cahuilla Indians v. Superior Court (2006) 40 Cal.4th 239, 247-248.)

Whether a separately organized business is closely linked or sufficiently connected to a tribe to benefit from the tribe’s immunity depends on whether the business acts as an “arm of the tribe,” such that its activities are properly deemed those of the tribe itself. (Cook v. AVI Casino (9th Cir. 2008) 548 F.3d 718, 725.) Any immunity a business might receive depends solely on whether it operates and conducts business as an arm of the tribe. (Allen v. Gold Country Casino (9th Cir. 2006) 464 F.3d 1044, 1047.) Importantly, “not all tribal businesses and corporations will function as ‘arms of the tribe.’” (Allen v. Mayhew (E.D.Cal. 2009) U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25319, *4-5.) Even a business organized and owned by a tribe “may engage in activities which are so far removed from tribal interests that it no longer can legitimately be seen as an extension of the tribe itself.” (Trudgeon, supra, 71 Cal.App.4th at p. 639.)

This Court has never addressed what criteria should be applied in California state courts to determine arm-of-the-tribe immunity. As set out below, with the Second District's decision in this case, state appellate cases are now in conflict on the proper formulation and application of the test for arm-of-the-tribe immunity.

In American Property, the Fourth District endorsed the federal Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals' six-factor test as "accurately reflect[ing] the general focus of the applicable federal and state case law" for determining if a business qualifies as an arm of the tribe.⁶ (American Property Management Corp. v. Superior Court (American Property) (2012) 206 Cal.App.4th 491, 501 [discussing the test in Breakthrough Management Group, Inc. v. Chukchansi Gold Casino and Resort (10th Cir. 2010) 629 F.3d 1173].) The American Property court set out the following non-exhaustive list of factors to be examined:

- (1) the entity's method of creation;
- (2) the entity's purpose;
- (3) the entity's structure, ownership, and management, including the amount of control the tribe has over the entity;
- (4) whether the tribe intended for the entity to have tribal sovereign immunity;

⁶ The Fourth District decided American Property just two weeks after the superior court dismissed this case. This Court denied the petition for review on August 22, 2012. (American Property Management Corp. v. Superior Court (2012) 2012 Cal. LEXIS 8069.)

- (5) the financial relationship between the tribe and the entity; and
- (6) whether the purposes of tribal sovereign immunity are served by granting immunity to the entity.

(American Property, supra, 206 Cal.App.4th at p. 501, citing Breakthrough Management Group, Inc. v. Chukchansi Gold Casino and Resort, supra, 629 F.3d at pp. 1187-1188.)

In contrast, the Second District Court of Appeal in this case limited its analysis to four factors in determining whether MNE and SFS functioned as arms of the respective tribes:

- (1) whether the tribal entity was formed by tribal resolution and according to tribal law;
- (2) whether the stated purpose of the tribal entity's formation was for tribal economic development;
- (3) whether there was a clearly expressed intent by the tribe to provide the tribal entity with immunity; and
- (4) whether the tribal entity has a governing structure that is appointed by and ultimately overseen by the tribe.

(Opn., at p. 24.)

Moreover, in discussing the scope of this narrower, more formalistic test, the Court of Appeal made clear that the first factor—whether the entity was formed under tribal law—“should be given predominant, if not necessarily dispositive, consideration.” (Opn., at p. 20 [citing to American Property's quotation of court decisions that considered creation under tribal law a factor weighing significantly in favor of finding an entity enjoyed sovereign immunity].) The Court of Appeal did not, however, cite any rationale for giving this factor effectively dispositive weight.

In contrast to the Second Circuit in this case, the Fourth District in American Property declined to accord dispositive weight to any single factor, and, in addition, recognized that some factors called for a substantive, not superficial, inquiry into the relationship between a business entity and the tribe. For instance, even while giving significant weight to the “method of creation” of the tribal business, the Fourth District nonetheless went on to evaluate all of the remaining five factors. (American Property, supra, 206 Cal.App.4th at pp. 501-503.) Indeed, the concurring opinion disagreed with the weight the majority accorded to the “method of creation” factor, yet still concluded that “on balance, the factors weigh[ed] against a determination” that the business was an arm of the tribe. (Id. at pp. 513-514.)

The method of creation of a business is a relevant threshold issue in the arm-of-a-tribe jurisdictional analysis, in part because the choice of law under which a tribe incorporates a business entity is one indication of whether the tribe intends to extend its sovereign immunity to the business. But in the Fourth District’s view, the method of creation is only one of six factors to be evaluated. In Trudgeon, the Fourth District included as a factor for evaluation “the extent to which the tribe controls the composition and operations of the business entity.” (Trudgeon, supra, 71 Cal.App.4th at

p. 641.) As one of the six factors for evaluation, the Fourth District in American Property examined the critical element of tribal management and control over the subject business, holding that the tribe's designation of a non-tribal entity to manage the business was another indication that the business was not an arm of the tribe. (American Property, supra, 206 Cal.App.4th at p. 505, quoting Dixon v. Picopa Construction Co. (Ariz. 1989) 772 P.2d 1104 ["tribally chartered corporation was not protected by sovereign immunity, in part, because 'the tribal government does not manage the corporation'"].)

The Second and Fourth Districts' tests are in material conflict regarding what factors courts should consider in evaluating the relationship between a business and a tribe, and deciding what weight to give to the factors. The resulting lack of uniformity creates uncertainty for both tribes and the State in establishing the jurisdictional boundaries between the two sovereigns. That uncertainty on this important and recurring issue warrants review by this Court.⁷

⁷ This may be a particularly appropriate time for the Court to consider issues relating to arm-of-the-tribe immunity. The United States Supreme Court is currently considering Michigan v. Bay Mills Indian Community (Bay Mills) (6th Cir. 2012) 695 F.3d 406, cert. granted June 24, 2103, No. 12-515, ___ U.S. ___ [133 S.Ct. 2850, 186 L.Ed.2d 907] (argued Dec. 2, 2013), in which the State of Michigan has argued that tribal sovereign immunity should not prevent a state from suing a tribe to enjoin an allegedly unlawful off-reservation gaming operation. The Court's

REVIEW IS NEEDED TO SETTLE THE QUESTION OF WHAT ARM-OF-THE-TRIBE TEST PROPERLY RESPECTS BOTH TRIBAL SOVEREIGN IMMUNITY AND THE STATE'S ABILITY TO ENFORCE CONSUMER PROTECTION LAWS

The Court of Appeal's decision in this case also presents an important legal question that merits this Court's review: Should the arm-of-the-tribe test applied in California's courts place reasonable limits on the extension of tribal sovereign immunity to businesses, or instead, should the test be largely a formal exercise? The Court of Appeal's decision bestows arm-of-the-tribe status on any business that can provide evidence of a formal tribal affiliation. It does not allow a court to look behind surface indicia of affiliation to see if there is actual tribal control of the business. Thus, the Court of Appeal's analysis fails to ensure that only qualified businesses enjoy sovereign immunity.

In this case, the Court of Appeal accepted at face value the information provided by MNE and SFS regarding the Payday Lenders' relationship with the tribes. The court did so despite the existence of undisputed contrary evidence in the record. This underscores the shortcomings of the test employed in this case. Evidence the People obtained from the FTC, other sources, and through the People's independent investigation showed that the Payday Lenders were not actually controlled by the tribes. (OB, at pp. 11-12, 20.) The Payday Lenders, along with third parties, operated the payday loan businesses in violation of the tribes' own laws and the tribal corporate organizational documents with respect to interest rates, control of bank accounts, and commingling of funds. (Ibid.) Nonetheless, the Court of Appeal held that, unless the tribes "concede" that the Payday Lenders are violating tribal law, a court cannot consider that evidence as a factor in determining whether a business entity is owned and actually controlled by a tribe. (Opn., at p. 24.) The court adopted a limited arm-of-the-tribe test using a formalistic inquiry to determine that MNE and SFS functioned as arms of the tribes based on corporate formation documents and assertions of control and not evidence of actual control by the tribes.

Review will allow this Court to articulate an arm-of-the-tribe test that permits enforcement of important consumer protection laws and prevents abuse or manipulation of tribal affiliation. The formalistic test applied in this case threatens to allow businesses with only superficial tribal affiliation to gain immunity from enforcement of California's laws, including those regulating, among other things, financial products such as mortgages, insurance and loans, contractors, car repair services, unemployment insurance and benefits, employees' wages and hours, workers compensation, and environmental protection, and, at the same time, to operate without actual tribal management or oversight. These businesses also will gain a competitive advantage over law-abiding businesses that operate in the state.

The Court of Appeal's test is subject to easy manipulation by businesses that seek to establish a merely nominal affiliation with a tribe solely to operate outside the reach of state regulators. This Court should accept review and establish a meaningful arm-of-the-tribe test that ensures that only businesses operating under actual tribal control and oversight enjoy sovereign immunity.

Applying the arm-of-the-tribe analysis as we directed in Ameriloan v. Superior Court (2008) 169 Cal.App.4th 81 (Ameriloan), the trial court dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction this action by the Commissioner of the California Department of Corporations against five “payday loan” businesses owned by Miami Nation Enterprises (MNE), the economic development authority of the Miami Tribe of Oklahoma, a federally recognized Indian tribe, and SFS, Inc., a corporation wholly owned by the Santee Sioux Nation, also a federally recognized Indian tribe. Because the two tribal entities and their cash-advance and short-term-loan businesses are sufficiently related to their respective Indian tribes to be protected from this state enforcement action under the doctrine of tribal sovereign immunity, we affirm.

FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

1. The Commissioner’s Complaint and the Initial Ruling on the Motions To Quash

Following an investigation by the Department of Corporations, in August 2006 the Commissioner¹ issued desist-and-refrain orders to Ameriloan, United Cash Loans, US Fast Cash, Preferred Cash and One Click Cash, directing them to cease their unlicensed and unlawful loan activities in California. In June 2007, after the businesses failed to comply with the desist-and-refrain orders, the Commissioner filed a complaint in the name of the People of the State of California for injunctive relief, restitution and civil penalties against Ameriloan, United Cash Loans, US Fast Cash, Preferred Cash and One Click Cash alleging they were providing short-term, payday loans over the Internet to California residents in violation of several provisions of the California Deferred Deposit Transaction Law (DDTL) (Fin. Code, § 2300 et seq.).² Specifically, the complaint

² “Payday loans are controversial. They typically offer about two weeks of credit, due in full on the borrower’s next payday, at annual interest rates of around 400 percent. While alleged the five businesses engaged in deferred deposit transactions within California without being licensed (Fin. Code, § 23005, subd. (a)), originated loans in excess of the $300 statutory maximum (Fin. Code, § 23035, subd. (a)), charged excessive loan fees (Fin. Code, § 23036, subd. (a)), and failed to provide their customers with various required written notices (Fin. Code, § 23001, subds. (a), (e)). The trial court granted the Commissioner's ex parte request for a temporary restraining order against each of the businesses and set a date for them to show cause why the request for a preliminary injunction should not be granted.

MNE and SFS specially appeared and moved to quash service of summons and to dismiss the complaint on the ground the five payday loan businesses named as defendants were simply trade names (or "dba's") of the two tribal entities and, as wholly owned and controlled entities of their respective tribes operating on behalf of the tribes, they were protected from this state enforcement action under the doctrine of tribal sovereign borrowers find fast relief, they are often left indebted for months, struggling to repay a loan that was marketed as a short-term solution. Proponents argue that payday loans are a useful form of credit for consumers who lack access to more conventional banking services, but opponents claim they overburden people who are already struggling to make ends meet." (The Pew Charitable Trusts, Payday Lending in America, Series Summary (Oct. 2013) <http://www.pewstates.org/uploadedFiles/PCS_Assets/2013/Pew_Payday_Lending_Series_Summary.pdf [as of January 21, 2014].) According to the findings of the Pew Charitable Trusts' Payday Lending in America study, 12 million Americans take out payday loans each year, spending approximately $7.4 billion annually. The average loan is $375. The average borrower is in debt for five months during the year, spending $520 in interest to repeatedly renew the loan. Sixty-nine percent of first-time borrowers use the loan for recurring bills, including rent or utilities; only 16 percent use them to deal with an unexpected expense such as a car repair. (Ibid.)

In affirming the judgment of dismissal under the doctrine of tribal sovereign immunity, we obviously take no position in the policy debate over the general undesirability or predatory nature of online payday loans and express no view on the merits of the Commissioner's allegations that the cash advance and short-term loan services offered by the tribal entities violate the DDTL.

immunity.³ Both tribal entities submitted declarations describing in some detail their relationship to their respective tribes and the economic benefits the tribes obtained from operating the businesses. In opposition, in addition to arguing the doctrine of tribal sovereign immunity did not apply to commercial activities outside of Indian country, the Commissioner urged at the very least discovery should be permitted with respect to the jurisdictional facts articulated in the declarations accompanying the motions to quash.

On October 19, 2007 the trial court denied the motion to quash service, concluding tribal sovereign immunity did not apply to the tribal entities' payday loan activities. In the same order the court granted the Commissioner's request for a preliminary injunction prohibiting the five named defendants from engaging in unlicensed, nonexempt deferred deposit transaction business, charging excessive fees, violating the Commissioner's cease-and-refrain orders and destroying records.

2. Our Ameriloan Decision

MNE and SFS, on behalf of the named payday loan businesses, petitioned this court for a writ of mandate vacating the trial court's order. In Ameriloan, supra, 169 Cal.App.4th 81 we granted the petition in part and directed the trial court to vacate its order denying the motions to quash and granting the preliminary injunction and to conduct a new evidentiary hearing to determine the applicability of the doctrine of tribal sovereign immunity in the particular circumstances of this action.⁴

³ In addition to asserting their immunity to suit, MNE and SFS contended their businesses, utilizing automated clearing house transactions, were not subject to the provisions of the DDTL, which, by its terms, applies to transactions involving "personal checks"—an issue we identified but did not resolve in Ameriloan in light of the uncertainty as to the court's subject matter jurisdiction. (See Ameriloan, supra, 169 Cal.App.4th at pp. 99-100.)

Our opinion briefly summarized the tribal sovereign immunity doctrine, explaining, “An Indian tribe’s sovereign nation status confers an absolute immunity from suit in federal or state court, absent an express waiver of that immunity or congressional authorization to sue.” (Ameriloan, supra, 169 Cal.App.4th at p. 89.) We then quoted the key language from the United States Supreme Court’s decision in Kiowa Tribe v. Manufacturing Tech. (1998) 523 U.S. 751 [118 S.Ct. 1700, 140 L.Ed.2d 981] (Kiowa), which held a federally recognized Indian tribe enjoys immunity from suit in state court even if the subject of the action is purely commercial activity that occurs on nontribal lands. Based on Kiowa we concluded the trial court had erred in ruling as a matter of law the doctrine of tribal sovereign immunity did not apply to the payday loan companies’ commercial activities occurring outside of Indian country. (Ameriloan, at pp. 89-90.)⁵ We also held the trial court had erred in concluding tribal sovereign immunity had been waived based on a “sue or be sued” clause in the resolution establishing MNE as an economic subdivision of the Miami Tribe of Oklahoma or the arbitration provision contained in each of the payday loan companies’ loan agreements with consumers. (Id. at pp. 94-96.)

To decide the motion to quash—that is, to decide whether the tribal entities, operating through the named payday loan companies, are entitled to the benefits of tribal sovereign immunity—we explained, the trial court “must first determine whether those entities, in fact, are acting on behalf of federally recognized tribes.” (Ameriloan, supra, 169 Cal.App.4th at p. 97.) “Tribal sovereign immunity extends not only to the Indian tribes themselves but also to those for-profit commercial entities that function as ‘arms of the tribes.’ [Citations.] The doctrine, however, does not “cover tribally chartered corporations that are completely independent of the tribe.”” (Ibid.) In light of the trial court’s failure to make findings pertinent to the arm-of-the-tribe analysis, we directed it to conduct a new evidentiary hearing and to consider whether the two tribal entities are sufficiently related to their respective tribes to be entitled to the protection of tribal sovereign immunity. “To this end, the court should consider the criteria expressed by the Courts of Appeal in Trudgeon [v. Fantasy Springs Casino (1999)] 71 Cal.App.4th [632,] 638 and [Redding] Rancheria [v. Superior Court (2001)] 88 Cal.App.4th [384,] 389, including whether the tribe and the entities are closely linked in governing structure and characteristics and whether federal policies intended to promote Indian tribal autonomy are furthered by extension of immunity to the business entity. (See also Allen v. Gold Country Casino (9th Cir. 2006) 464 F.3d 1044, 1046 [the relevant question for purposes of applying tribal sovereign immunity ‘is not whether the activity may be characterized as a business, which is irrelevant under Kiowa, but whether the entity acts as an arm of the tribe so that its activities are properly deemed to be those of the tribe’].)” (Ameriloan, at pp. 97-98.)

In response to the Commissioner’s request to be permitted discovery into the assertion that profits from the payday loan operations benefit the two tribes that created MNE and SFS, we observed, “we see no reason why limited discovery, directed solely to matters affecting the trial court’s subject matter jurisdiction, should impact the payday loan companies’ special appearance” (Ameriloan, supra, 169 Cal.App.4th at p. 98.) Nonetheless, because no issue relating to discovery was raised in the petition for writ of mandate, we made no express ruling on the permissible scope of any discovery when the matter returned to the trial court. (Id. at pp. 98-99.)

3. The Parties’ Evidentiary Presentations Regarding the Arm-of-the-Tribe Issue

Following our Ameriloan decision, discovery was conducted in the trial court, ultimately under the supervision of a discovery referee appointed pursuant to the parties’ stipulation under Code of Civil Procedure section 639.⁶ Thereafter, MNE and SFS renewed their motion to quash service and to dismiss the action for lack of subject matter jurisdiction, submitting with the moving papers extensive supporting documentary evidence. In response, the Commissioner filed a motion for a preliminary injunction, which the trial court deemed an opposition to the motion to quash. After further consideration the trial court then conducted an evidentiary hearing on May 10, 2012.

a. Evidence from the tribal entities

i. The Miami Tribe of Oklahoma

According to the tribal entities' evidence, the Miami Tribe of Oklahoma was organized in 1936 pursuant to the Oklahoma Indian Welfare Act of 1936 (25 U.S.C. § 501) and is governed by a constitution and by-laws approved by the Secretary of the Interior. Its ancestral homelands included much of the upper Midwest (what is now Indiana, Illinois, Ohio and lower Michigan and Wisconsin), but the Miami people were forcibly removed from this area in 1846 and relocated several times thereafter, ultimately to "Indian Territory," now Oklahoma. Its headquarters are located on land held in trust for the tribe's benefit by the United States in rural northeastern Oklahoma, approximately 90 miles from Tulsa. The United States Small Business Administration has included this land within its designations of historically underutilized business zones.

Recognizing "a critical need for the development of economic activities . . . to provide for the well-being of the citizens of the Miami Tribe," the tribe organized MNE as a wholly owned and controlled tribal entity pursuant to the May 2005 Amended Miami Nation Enterprises Act. That Act specifies MNE "shall be a subordinate economic enterprise of the Miami Tribe of Oklahoma" and provides the tribe's governing body, the Tribal Business Committee, has delegated its authority to MNE: "[T]he creation and operation of Miami Nation Enterprises serves an essential government function of the Miami Tribe of Oklahoma by allowing the Miami Tribe to provide directly for the development of tribal revenue generating activities and to acquire property.” The Miami Tribe expressly provided MNE would enjoy all privileges and immunities of the tribe itself, including “the right of sovereign immunity from unconsented civil suit.”

MNE’s initial board of directors consisted of the members of the Tribal Business Committee; the chief of the Miami Tribe appointed all successor members of the MNE board with the approval of the Tribal Business Committee; the current members of the board are members of the Miami Tribe; and the initial officers of MNE were hired by the Tribal Business Committee, including its current chief executive officer. MNE Services, Inc. is a wholly owned subsidiary of MNE, created in 2008 pursuant to the Amended Miami Nation Enterprises Act. MNE Services, Inc. processes and approves loan applications pursuant to underwriting criteria approved by MNE. MNE/MNE Services, Inc. transact Internet lending under the trade names Ameriloan, US Fast Cash and United Cash Loans. Their lending activities are subject to tribal laws governing interest rates, loans and cash advance services. According to supporting declarations, all loan applications are approved by MNE on federal trust land under the sovereign jurisdiction of the Miami Tribe of Oklahoma; and profits from MNE/MNE Services, Inc. “directly or indirectly enable the Miami Tribe to fund critical governmental services to its members, such as tribal law enforcement, poverty assistance, housing, nutrition, preschool, elder care programs, school supplies and scholarships. . . . The cash advance business is a critical component of the Miami Tribe’s economy and governmental operations.”

ii. The Santee Sioux Nation

The Santee Sioux Nation was organized under section 16 of the Indian Reorganization Act of 1934 and is governed by a constitution approved by the Secretary of the Interior in 2002. The Santee Sioux reservation is located in an isolated, rural region of northeastern Nebraska. (The ancestral home of the Santee Sioux is in present-day Minnesota. They were forcibly relocated first to South Dakota and then to their current site.) The United States Small Business Administration has also included this land within its designations of historically underutilized business zones.

Acting through its governing body, the Tribal Council, in 2005 the tribe created SFS, Inc., a wholly owned chartered tribal corporation whose sole purpose is to generate revenue to help fund the Santee Sioux's governmental operations and social welfare programs. SFS's articles of incorporation expressly state it enjoys the tribe's sovereign immunity from suit. SFS is licensed pursuant to tribal law to operate an online lending business (cash advance services and short-term loans) utilizing the trade names Preferred Cash Loans and One Click Cash. SFS's articles of incorporation mandate that the board of directors of SFS, which consists of the members of the Tribal Council, manage SFS; and the Tribal Council appointed the tribe's business manager as the chief executive officer of SFS.

According to the declaration of Robert Campbell, an enrolled member of the Santee Sioux Nation, a member of the Tribal Council and the treasurer of SFS, "the loan transactions are approved and consummated in Indian lands and within the jurisdiction of the Santee Sioux Nation." In addition, Campbell testified, "These cash advance services are the primary source of income for SFS." "All profits earned by SFS go to the Santee Sioux to help fund its government operations and social welfare programs. . . . The Santee Sioux reservation is a severely economically depressed region, and the profits generated by SFS are essential to maintaining a functioning government that is able to provide the essential government services to its members."

b. The Commissioner's evidence

Without seriously questioning the close structural relationship between the Miami Tribe of Oklahoma and MNE or the Santee Sioux Nation and SFS, the Commissioner presented evidence to demonstrate the actual cash advance services and loan activities of the named defendants were actively operated and controlled by nontribal third parties, not the tribes themselves or their tribally owned corporations. At the outset, the Commissioner explained the various trade names used by the named defendants were originally registered by one Scott Tucker to advertise and market payday lending services several years before they were adopted by MNE and SFS. In July 2008 SFS and MNE entered into management agreements with a Tucker-controlled company, N.M. Service Corp. (NMS) to direct and operate their lending activities. The Commissioner conceded MNE and SFS had final authority under these agreements for making the loans, but contended Tucker's management company effectively exercised that authority through advance instructions or approval parameters; in fact, the Commissioner argued, Tucker and his company totally controlled, operated and managed the businesses as part of an interrelated network of companies that have common ownership, business functions and employees and that persistently commingle funds. According to the Commissioner's information obtained independently from the Federal Trade Commission and other sources (that is, not through discovery in this proceeding), MNE and SFS received one percent of the gross revenues from their cash advance/loan businesses while Tucker's company retained the "net cash flow of the Lending Business."

The Commissioner noted the officers, directors and shareholders of MNE Services and SFS are not personally liable to creditors or claimants of the corporations for corporate actions. Consequently, neither the Miami Tribe of Oklahoma nor the Santee Sioux Nation is potentially subject to liability for any misconduct in the cash advance, short-term lending businesses. The Commissioner also asserted MNE's and SFS's lending businesses regularly violated tribal laws in the areas of permissible interest rates, control of bank accounts and the commingling of funds.

4. The Trial Court's Order Dismissing the Commissioner's Enforcement Action

Following the evidentiary hearing, the trial court granted MNE and SFS's motion to quash service of summons and dismissed the case for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. Applying the criteria articulated in Trudgeon v. Fantasy Springs Casino, supra, 71 Cal.App.4th 632 for determining whether a tribal entity functions as an arm of the tribe for purposes of tribal sovereign immunity, as we had directed in Ameriloan, the trial court summarized the evidence and concluded the tribal entities were closely linked in governing structure and characteristics to their respective tribes. The court rejected as unpersuasive the Commissioner's argument the payday loan businesses were not arms of their tribes or entitled to tribal sovereign immunity because Tucker and his company completely controlled their operations and were the primary beneficiaries of the payday loan activities: "[C]ontrol of a corporation does not mean control of business minutiae; the tribe can be enmeshed in the direction and control of the business without being involved in the actual management. . . . [The Commissioner's] arguments go beyond governing structure and characteristics and seek a determination that sovereign immunity does not apply because the Tribes have not exercised sufficient control of the Defendants or have allowed third parties to extract too much money (benefit) from the tribal entities. However, these concerns are the Tribes' concerns. The fact that the Defendant tribal entities may be violating the Tribes' own laws and regulations is a matter for the Tribes and is not a basis to determine the entities are not closely linked in governing structure and characteristics."

The court also ruled the federal policies intended to promote tribal autonomy were furthered by extension of immunity to MNE and SFS and their payday loan businesses notwithstanding the Commissioner's contrary position based on the purportedly disproportionate benefits received by the nontribal managers: "It is undisputed that the Tribes receive some amount of the gross revenues, which allows the Tribes to fund important services and projects for their members. It is not the province of this court to determine that, because the Tribes did not make a better deal with [the nontribal third parties] in which they secured a greater percentage of gross revenues, Indian tribal autonomy is no longer furthered. Such an interpretation would substitute this court's analysis of the Tribes' interests for the Tribes' own analysis of what is in their best interests. . . . Tribal immunity cannot be defeated simply because third parties who operate Tribe directed/controlled businesses also benefit substantially—even perhaps substantially more than the Tribes."

The Commissioner filed a timely notice of appeal.

DISCUSSION

1. Standard of Review

“On a motion asserting sovereign immunity as a basis for dismissing an action for lack of subject matter jurisdiction, the plaintiff bears the burden of proving by a preponderance of evidence that jurisdiction exists.” (Campo Band of Mission Indians v. Superior Court (2006) 137 Cal.App.4th 175, 183; accord, American Property Management Corp. v. Superior Court (2012) 206 Cal.App.4th 491, 498 (American Property).) If resolution of the jurisdiction question depends on disputed issues of fact, we review the trial court’s findings for substantial evidence. (Singletary v. International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Local 18 (2012) 212 Cal.App.4th 34, 41; see Professional Engineers in California Government v. Kempton (2007) 40 Cal.4th 1016, 1032.) Absent conflicting extrinsic evidence, the question of subject matter jurisdiction over an action against an Indian tribe is purely one of law, subject to de novo review. (American Property, at p. 498; Warburton/Buttner v. Superior Court (2002) 103 Cal.App.4th 1170, 1180; see Vons Companies, Inc. v. Seabest Foods, Inc. (1996) 14 Cal.4th 434, 449.)

2. Tribal Sovereign Immunity and the Arm-of-the-Tribe Analysis

“Indian tribes are ‘domestic dependent nations’ that exercise inherent sovereign authority over their members and territories.” (Oklahoma Tax Comm’n v. Potawatomi Tribe (1991) 498 U.S. 505, 509 [111 S.Ct. 905, 112 L.Ed.2d 1112].) The recognition of tribes as sovereigns in a government-to-government relationship with other sovereign nations has its source in the United States Constitution and is a well-established principle of federal Indian law. (See 25 U.S.C. § 3601(1), (3) [“there is a government-to-government relationship between the United States and each Indian tribe”; “Congress, through statutes, treaties, and the exercise of administrative authorities, has recognized the self-determination, self-reliance, and inherent sovereignty of Indian tribes”]; see generally Judicial Council Comment, Cal. Rules of Court, rule 10.60.)

Tribal sovereign immunity “is a necessary corollary to Indian sovereignty and self-governance.” (Three Affiliated Tribes v. Wold Engineering (1986) 476 U.S. 877, 890 [106 S.Ct. 2305, 90 L.Ed.2d 881].) “[I]n the absence of federal authorization, tribal immunity, like all aspects of tribal sovereignty, is privileged from diminution by the States.” (Id. at p. 890; see Santa Clara Pueblo v. Martinez (1978) 436 U.S. 49, 58 [98 S.Ct. 1670, 56 L.Ed.2d 106] [“Indian tribes have long been recognized as possessing the common-law immunity from suit traditionally enjoyed by sovereign powers. [Citations.] This aspect of tribal sovereignty, like all others, is subject to the superior and plenary control of Congress. But ‘without congressional authorization,’ the ‘Indian Nations are exempt from suit.’”].)

“[A]n Indian tribe is not subject to suit in a state court—even for breach of contract involving off-reservation commercial conduct—unless ‘Congress has authorized the suit or the tribe has waived its immunity.’” (C & L Enterprises, Inc. v. Citizen Band Potawatomi Tribe of Okla. (2001) 532 U.S. 411, 414 [121 S.Ct. 1589, 149 L.Ed.2d 623]; accord, Kiowa, supra, 523 U.S. at p. 760 [tribal sovereign immunity applies without distinction between on- and off-reservation or governmental or commercial activities]; see generally Cohen’s Handbook of Federal Indian Law (2012 ed.) Sovereign Immunity § 7.05[1][a] [“[t]he doctrine of tribal sovereign immunity is rooted in federal common law and reflects the federal Constitution’s treatment of Indian tribes as governments in the Indian commerce clause”].)

Much as Eleventh Amendment immunity from suit in federal court applies not only to the states themselves but also to entities that are properly considered arms of the state (see, e.g., Alden v. Maine (1999) 527 U.S. 706, 756 [119 S.Ct. 2240, 144 L.Ed.2d 636]; Mt. Healthy City Board of Ed. v. Doyle (1977) 429 U.S. 274, 280 [97 S.Ct. 568, 50 L.Ed.2d 471]), tribal sovereign immunity protects not only a tribe itself but also subordinate governmental or commercial entities acting as arms of the tribe. (American Property, supra, 206 Cal.App.4th at p. 500; Ameriloan, supra, 169 Cal.App.4th at p. 97; see Cohen’s Handbook of Federal Indian Law, supra, § 7.05[1][a] [tribal immunity “extends to entities that are arms of the tribes”]; see generally Cook v. AVI Casino Enterprises, Inc. (9th Cir. 2008) 548 F.3d 718, 727 [comparing arm-of-the-tribe analysis to deciding whether a state instrumentality could invoke the state’s sovereign immunity].)

The United States Supreme Court has acknowledged, but not yet analyzed, the arm-of-the-tribe concept. In Inyo County v. Paiute-Shoshone Indians of Bishop Community of Bishop Colony (2003) 538 U.S. 701, 705, fn. 1 [123 S.Ct. 1887, 155 L.Ed.2d 933], a federally recognized Indian tribe and its tribally chartered, wholly owned gaming corporation asserted in a civil rights action that tribal sovereign immunity precluded a county district attorney from executing a search warrant and seizing casino employment records. At the outset the Supreme Court noted, “The United States [as amicus curiae] maintains, and the County does not dispute, that the Corporation is an ‘arm’ of the Tribe for sovereign immunity purposes.” The Court did not thereafter discuss the status of the gaming corporation as an arm of the tribe, resolving the case without deciding the immunity issue.⁷ However, opinions from a number of federal and state courts, including the California Supreme Court and this court in Ameriloan, have recognized the arm-of-the-tribe prong of the tribal sovereign immunity doctrine and identified a range of factors to consider in determining whether a subordinate entity is sufficiently related to a tribe to be protected by tribal sovereign immunity. (See Agua Caliente Band of Cahuilla Indians v. Superior Court (2006) 40 Cal.4th 239, 247-248 [“immunity extends to entities that are arms of the tribes,” but “apparently does not cover tribally chartered corporations that are completely independent of the tribe”]; see generally Cohen’s Handbook of Federal Indian Law, supra, § 7.05[1][a] [arm-of-the-tribe analysis “considers tribal involvement in the creation and control of the entity, tribal intent to clothe the entity with immunity, and whether the entity serves tribal sovereign

interests such as economic development”]; Martin & Schwartz, The Alliance Between Payday Lenders and Tribes: Are Both Tribal Sovereignty and Consumer Protection at Risk? (2012) 69 Wash. & Lee L.Rev. 751, 776 [observing that “[c]ourts have articulated numerous variations on the test for whether a tribal business enterprise is entitled to the tribe’s immunity and identifying six “common factors” used in arm-of-the-tribe analysis].)

In Trudgeon v. Fantasy Springs Casino, supra, 71 Cal.App.4th 632 our colleagues in Division Two of the Fourth District adopted a three-factor analysis developed by the Supreme Court of Minnesota: “‘1) whether the business entity is organized for a purpose that is governmental in nature, rather than commercial; [¶] ‘2) whether the tribe and the business entity are closely linked in government structure and other characteristics; and [¶] ‘3) whether federal policies intended to promote Indian tribal autonomy are furthered by the extension of immunity to the business entity.’” (Id. at p. 638, quoting Gavle v. Little Six, Inc. (Minn. 1996) 555 N.W.2d 284, 294-295.)⁸ Applying this test the court held sovereign immunity barred plaintiff’s state court personal injury lawsuit against Cabazon Bingo, Inc., a corporation organized by the Cabazon Band of Mission Indians, a federally recognized Indian tribe, to operate a gaming and entertainment complex on tribal land.⁹

In American Property, supra, 206 Cal.App.4th 491, a panel of Division One of the Fourth District employed the set of six factors set forth in the Tenth Circuit's decision in Breakthrough Management Group, Inc. v. Chukchansi Gold Casino & Resort (10th Cir. 2010) 629 F.3d 1173, 1181, 1187-1188, for examining the relationship between a subordinate economic entity and the tribe: ““(1) their method of creation; (2) their purpose; (3) their structure, ownership, and management, including the amount of control the tribe has over the entities; (4) whether the tribe intended for the entities to have tribal sovereign immunity; (5) the financial relationship between the tribe and the entities; and (6) whether the purposes of tribal sovereign immunity are served by granting immunity to the entities.”” (American Property, at p. 501.) Applying those factors, which it found “accurately reflect[ed] the general focus of the applicable federal and state case law” (ibid.), but also quoting from several other decisions considering the arm-of-the-tribe question including Trudgeon, the court held U.S. Grant, LLC, the owner of a historic hotel in downtown San Diego, was not an arm of the Sycuan Band of the Kumeyaay Nation, a federally recognized Indian tribe, and thus not protected by the tribe's sovereign immunity. The “dispositive fact” for the court was that U.S. Grant, LLC was a California limited liability company, separated by several other layers of California limited liability companies from the Sycuan Tribal Development Corporation (STDC), a corporation charter under Sycuan's tribal laws. (See American Property, at pp. 495, 501, 505.) From the complex structure created to insulate STDC from any possible liability in connection with ownership of the hotel, the court concluded “STDC was not primarily concerned about sovereign immunity with respect to the entities that it created to facilitate its investment. . . .” (Id. at p. 505.) The court expressly noted it was not expressing any view on whether STDC itself was protected by tribal sovereign immunity. (Id. at p. 505, fn. 10.)

The Colorado Supreme Court in Cash Advance and Preferred Loans v. Colorado ex rel. Suthers (Colo. 2010) 242 P.3d 1099, after reviewing decisions from a number of federal courts of appeals, articulated its own variation of the arm-of-the-tribe analysis in considering the precise question presented by the case at bar: Are MNE, conducting a short-term loan business under the trade name Cash Advance, and SFS, conducting a similar business under the trade name Preferred Cash Loans, arms of the Miami Nation of Oklahoma and the Santee Sioux Nation, respectively, and therefore protected by the tribes' sovereign immunity from state investigatory enforcement actions? Remanding the matter to the trial court to resolve that question in the first instance, the Supreme Court identified three factors, "each of which focuses on the relationship between the tribal entities and the tribes, to help guide the trial court's determination whether the entities in this case [MNE and SFS] act as arms of the tribes so that their activities are properly deemed to be those of the tribes: (1) whether the tribes created the entities pursuant to tribal law; (2) whether the tribes own and operate the entities; and (3) whether the entities' immunity protects the tribes' sovereignty." (Id. at p. 1110.)

3. The Law of the Case Doctrine Does Not Restrict the Factors Appropriately Considered in the Arm-of-the-Tribe Analysis

Under the law of the case doctrine, "a matter adjudicated on a prior appeal normally will not be relitigated on a subsequent appeal in the same case." (Davies v. Krasna (1975) 14 Cal.3d 502, 507; People v. Barragan (2004) 32 Cal.4th 236, 246 ["when an appellate court "states in its opinion a principle or rule of law necessary to the decision, that principle or rule becomes the law of the case and must be adhered to throughout [the case's] subsequent progress, both in the lower court and upon subsequent appeal""].) The doctrine applies to decisions of intermediate appellate courts as well as courts of last resort (People v. Murtishaw (2011) 51 Cal.4th 574, 589) and "even if the court that issued the opinion becomes convinced in a subsequent consideration that the former opinion is erroneous." (Santa Clarita Organization for Planning the Environment v. County of Los Angeles (2007) 157 Cal.App.4th 149, 156; see Morohoshi v. Pacific Home (2004) 34 Cal.4th 482, 491 ["it is only when the former rule is deemed erroneous that the doctrine of law of the case becomes at all important"].) The doctrine promotes finality by preventing relitigation of issues previously decided. (George Arakelian Farms, Inc. v. Agricultural Labor Relations Bd. (1989) 49 Cal.3d 1279, 1291; see Searle v. Allstate Life Ins. Co. (1985) 38 Cal.3d 425, 434.)

In Ameriloan, supra, 169 Cal.App.4th 81 we held MNE and SFS's motion to quash should be granted if the tribal entities and the lending businesses they operate are sufficiently related to their respective tribes to be protected by tribal immunity and specifically referred to the criteria expressed in Trudgeon v. Fantasy Springs Casino, supra, 71 Cal.App.4th 632 for analyzing the arm-of-the-tribe doctrine. (Ameriloan, at p. 98.)¹⁰ In urging us to reverse the trial court's order dismissing the case for lack of subject matter jurisdiction, the Commissioner analyzes the evidence primarily in light of the six factors for evaluating the immunity question set forth in the Tenth Circuit's decision in Breakthrough Management Group, Inc. v. Chukchansi Gold Casino & Resort, supra, 629 F.3d 1173, as restated by Division One of the Fourth District in American Property, supra, 206 Cal.App.4th 491. In their respondents' brief MNE and SFS argue the Commissioner's reliance on American Property violates the law of the case doctrine, which, they assert, requires use of a "two-part test"¹¹ based on the analysis in Trudgeon to the exclusion of any other arm-of-the-tribe analysis.

MNE and SFS misapprehend the import of our prior decision in Ameriloan. As discussed, in Ameriloan we mandated the trial court vacate its ruling that tribal sovereign immunity did not apply simply because MNE and SFS were conducting off-reservation, for-profit commercial activities (Ameriloan, supra, 169 Cal.App.4th at pp. 89-91). We also rejected the arguments that application of tribal sovereign immunity in this case would intrude on California's exercise of its reserved powers under the Tenth Amendment (id. at pp. 91-94) and tribal sovereign immunity had been waived (id. at pp. 94-96). Accordingly, under the law of the case, as the trial court recognized when it revisited the motion to quash, the only question remaining was whether MNE and SFS and the businesses they operate function as "arms of the tribe." (Id. at pp. 97-99.) Although we directed the trial court to consider the criteria expressed in Trudgeon in making that determination, nothing we said prohibited the trial court—or restricts this court in deciding the appeal now before us—from considering additional aspects of the relationship between the Miami Tribe of Oklahoma and the Santee Sioux Nation, on the one hand, and MNE and SFS and their payday loan businesses, on the other hand, in deciding the immunity issue. Regardless of how many nonexclusive and overlapping factors a court identifies, the relevant inquiry is ultimately the same: Are the tribal entities sufficiently related to their respective tribes to be protected by tribal sovereign immunity? Ameriloan established the governing legal principle. It did not prescribe a precise analytic process to apply that principle to the facts developed at the evidentiary hearing we authorized.

4. MNE and SFS Are Protected by Tribal Sovereign Immunity from the Commissioner's Enforcement Action

There can be little question that MNE and SFS, considered initially by themselves and without regard to the payday lending activities at issue in this enforcement action, function as arms of their respective tribes. In marked contrast to the situation considered in American Property, supra, 206 Cal.App.4th 491, where the dispositive fact was that U.S. Grant, LLC had been organized under California law and was separated from the STDC, an entity created under tribal law, by several other lawyers of California limited liability companies (see id. at pp. 495, 501, 505), MNE was created directly under the Miami Tribe's tribal law as a subordinate unit of the tribe itself to provide for its economic development. Also unlike the Sycuan Band's relationship to U.S. Grant, LLC

(see id. at p. 505), the Miami Tribe expressly intended for MNE to be covered by tribal sovereign immunity. Like our colleagues in Division One of the Fourth District, we believe the tribe's method and purpose for creating a subordinate economic entity are the most significant factors in determining whether it is protected by a tribe's sovereign immunity and should be given predominant, if not necessarily dispositive, consideration. (See American Property, at p. 501 [quoting a number of court decisions that "have considered creation of an entity under tribal law as a factor weighing significantly in favor of a conclusion that the entity shares in the tribe's sovereign immunity"].)¹²

Other elements of the various tests appearing in the case law also support the trial court's arm-of-the-tribe conclusion as applied to MNE. As discussed, MNE's initial board of directors consisted of the Miami Tribe's business committee, and the chief of the tribe has appointed all successor members of the MNE board in consultation with the business committee; all five members of the board are members of the Miami Tribe. Profits earned by MNE are utilized by the Miami Tribe to fund critical governmental services to its members including tribal law enforcement, poverty assistance, preschool and elder care programs. In addition, any tribal funds and other resources used to create, capitalize and operate MNE are necessarily at risk in its business operations. That tribal assets might not be directly jeopardized if MNE were allowed to be sued does not appear to be significant since the very purpose of creating any subordinate corporate entity is to create the opportunity for economic gain while protecting the tribe from potential liabilities; in the absence of a tribal guarantee, a judgment against a corporation will never impact a tribal treasury. (Cf. Cook v. AVI Casino Enterprises, Inc., supra, 548 F.3d at p. 725 [tribal corporation "competing in the economic mainstream" protected by tribal immunity if it functions as an arm of the tribe; here, economic benefits produced by tribal corporation inure to the tribe's benefit because "all capital surplus from the casino shall be deposited in the Tribe's treasury and because the Tribe, as the sole shareholder, enjoys all of the benefits of an increase in the casino's value"]; Memphis Biofuels v. Chickasaw Nation Industries Inc. (6th Cir. 2009) 585 F.3d 917, 920-921 [section 17 of the Indian Reorganization Act of 1934, 25 U.S.C. § 477, authorizing incorporation of a federally chartered tribe's business activities, "creates 'arms of the tribe' that do not automatically forfeit tribal-sovereign immunity"]; but see American Property, supra, 206 Cal.App.4th at p. 506 ["due to U.S. Grant, LLC's status as a California limited liability company, the Sycuan tribe's assets would not be exposed by any judgment against U.S. Grant, LLC"].) In sum, the Miami Tribe of Oklahoma and MNE are closely linked through method of creation, ownership, structure, control and other salient characteristics; and, although the operations of MNE are commercial rather than governmental—itsself an essentially neutral consideration after Kiowa—extension of immunity to it plainly furthers federal policies intended to promote tribal autonomy. (See Ameriloan, supra, 169 Cal.App.4th at p. 98; Trudgeon v. Fantasy Springs Casino, supra, 71 Cal.App.4th at p. 638.)

As with MNE, and again unlike the California limited liability company evaluated in American Property, SFS is a wholly owned corporation organized under tribal law and expressly protected from suit by the tribe's immunity. Pursuant to SFS's articles of incorporation, its board of directors consists of the members of the Tribal Council, who manage SFS; and the Tribal Council appointed the tribe's business manager as the chief executive officer of SFS. All profits earned by SFS are used by the Santee Sioux to help fund its government operations and social welfare programs, furthering the tribe's sovereign interest in economic development. Indeed, the evidence before the trial court was, because the reservation is in a severely depressed region, those profits are essential to maintaining a functioning tribal government able to provide necessary services to the tribe's members. Thus, the Santee Sioux and SFS are also closely linked by virtue of SFS's method of creation, ownership, structure and control, and extension of immunity to it substantially promotes tribal autonomy.

Although the tribes own and control MNE and SFS, their relationship to the cash advance and short-term loan businesses operated by those tribal entities under various trade names—Ameriloan, US Fast Cash, United Cash Loans, One Click Cash and Preferred Cash Loans—is slightly more complicated. According to the Commissioner’s evidence at the hearing on the motion to quash, those names had been registered and used to market payday lending services by Scott Tucker and/or his company NMS (or its predecessors) for several years prior to the entry of MNE and SFS into the short-term loan business in July 2008. More significantly, day-to-day operations of these fast-cash businesses—what the trial court referred to as “business minutiae”—have been effectively delegated pursuant to management agreements to NMS, a third-party, nontribal entity. Additionally, MNE and SFS do not participate in the net income from the businesses, receiving instead only a modest percentage of the gross revenues, characterized by the Commissioner as similar to a royalty. Thus, the Commissioner asserts in the opening brief, “The management agreements and bank records demonstrate that SFS and MNE, doing business as the Payday Lenders, are simply revenue-producing businesses created to facilitate Tucker’s ordinary for-profit payday lending business for a set fee”—disparagingly denominated as a “sham,” “rent-a-tribe” scheme by the Commissioner.

Yet the Commissioner necessarily concedes, as the evidence demonstrated, under the management agreements MNE and SFS have final decisionmaking authority to approve or disapprove any loans; advance instructions or approval parameters are established by them to allow the third-party managers to function on a quick-turnaround basis. Indeed, the agreements expressly provide that the tribal entities have “the sole proprietary interest in and responsibility for the conduct of the business” and that NMS’s day-to-day management of the operations is “subject to the oversight and control of” MNE and SFS, respectively.

In other words, MNE and SFS are not merely passive bystanders to the challenged lending activities. A tribal entity engaged in a commercial enterprise that is otherwise entitled to be protected by tribal immunity does not lose that immunity simply by contracting with non-tribal members to operate the business. (See, e.g., Native American Distrib. v. Seneca-Cayuga Tobacco (10th Cir. 2008) 546 F.3d 1288, 1294 [recognizing tribal immunity protected tobacco business of Seneca-Cayuga Tribe of Oklahoma from suit by third-party distributor notwithstanding limited waiver of that immunity in separate agreement with management company engaged to operate tribal business]; Cabazon Band of Mission Indians v. County of Riverside (9th Cir. 1986) 783 F.2d 900, 901, affd. sub nom. California v. Cabazon Band of Mission Indians (1987) 480 U.S. 202 [107 S.Ct. 1083, 94 L.Ed.2d 244] [noting with approval the tribal business was “operated by non-Indian professional operators, who receive a percentage of the profits”]; but cf. American Property, supra, 206 Cal.App.4th at p. 505 [designation of a nontribal entity to manage business created under state law, rather than tribal law, is a further indication that the business should not be considered an arm of the tribe for the purpose of sovereign immunity].)¹³ Similarly, whether or not the Miami Tribe and the Santee Sioux negotiated good or poor management agreements for themselves—whether a share of net profits would be more beneficial under the circumstances than a percentage of gross revenues and whether they could have insisted on a higher percentage than they actually received—even if not minutiae, cannot serve as the basis to determine the tribal entities are not functioning as arms of their respective tribes.

The recurring theme of the Commissioner’s briefing and oral argument is that online payday lenders engage in egregious, deceptive and exploitive practices prohibited by California law. That leitmotif is reinforced by the assertion MNE and SFS’s business activities also violate tribal laws and their own organizational documents with respect to interest rates as well as control of bank accounts and commingling of funds. Repeated commercial conduct the tribal entities concede violates tribal law or that is shown by uncontroverted evidence to be prohibited by the tribes as a matter of law may well be a factor properly considered in determining whether the entities are functioning as arms of the tribe. (Cf. Flatley v. Mauro (2006) 39 Cal.4th 299, 316.) But the record here is far from undisputed, and it would offend all notions of tribal sovereignty for a state court to adjudicate whether MNE or SFS is violating tribal law. Moreover, as we explained in Ameriloan, supra, 169 Cal.App.4th at page 93, although we recognize the public policy considerations supporting the Commissioner's efforts to protect poor and poorly educated consumers, "“sovereign immunity is not a discretionary doctrine that may be applied as a remedy depending on the equities of a given situation” Rather it presents a pure jurisdictional question.”¹⁴

In the end, tribal immunity does not depend on our evaluation of the respectability or ethics of the business in which a tribe or tribal entity elects to engage. Absent an extraordinary set of circumstances not present here, a tribal entity functions as an arm of the tribe if it has been formed by tribal resolution and according to tribal law, for the stated purpose of tribal economic development and with the clearly expressed intent by the sovereign tribe to convey its immunity to that entity, and has a governing structure both appointed by and ultimately overseen by the tribe. Such a tribal entity is immune from suit absent express waiver or congressional authorization. Neither third-party management of day-to-day operations nor retention of only a minimal percentage of the profits from the enterprise (however that may be defined) justifies judicial negation of that inherent element of tribal sovereignty.

DISPOSITION

The judgment is affirmed. MNE and SFS are to recover their costs on appeal.
