Conference Dates: March 23 & 24, 2018

Hosted by Casino del Sol & James E. Rogers College of Law in Tucson, Arizona

International trade and international relations are not new concepts to the indigenous peoples of the world. Native Nations in the western hemisphere once had expansive trade networks that extended from Canada to South America. Those trade networks were disrupted during European contact and have laid dormant ever since. This conference brings together indigenous leaders and experts in various fields to answer one question: how can indigenous peoples use the global trade model to revitalize trade networks domestically and internationally? Join the discussion on March 23-24, 2018 to see how even in this modern economic era, "All Roads Lead to Chaco Canyon."
