

University of Arizona Indigenous Governance Program

The Indigenous Governance Program (IGP), a partnership between University of Arizona Law's Indigenous Peoples Law and Policy (IPLP) Program and the University of Arizona Native Nations Institute (NNI), provides professional development, leadership training, and graduate education for individuals interested in a deep, practical understanding of indigenous governance and rights.

For three weeks each year, IGP hosts the January in Tucson intensive education session at the University of Arizona. The event brings together distinguished faculty in the field of indigenous governance and indigenous rights, and gives them the opportunity to teach and hold discussions with indigenous leaders, practitioners, and community members. As a result, January in Tucson attracts an international cohort of indigenous leaders, policymakers, and advocates. The classroom experience and peer-to-peer learning is unlike any other educational experience.

IGP offers 17 different 3-day courses covering topics including Indigenous governance, nation building, economic and community development, and leadership. Scholarship and registration details are available at: <https://igp.arizona.edu/january-tucson>
