CILS provides a variety of legal services including brief counsel and advice and extended representation on core legal issues affecting Native Americans and Indian tribes. CILS is involved in litigation, policy analysis and advocacy and also provides transactional services to tribes involving economic development and tribal infrastructure. The Bishop office of CILS is also home to the Eastern Sierra Legal Assistance Program and the Inyo-Mono Senior Legal Program. CILS has four offices throughout California. Additional information about CILS may be found on our website, at www.calindian.org.

POSITION DESCRIPTION & PROJECT BACKGROUND:

With support from California ChangeLawyers, CILS is hiring a fulltime summer fellow, post-bar (fall) fellow, or recent law school graduate, for a summer 2022 or fall 2022 fellowship. Supervised by the Legal Director and Bishop Directing Attorney, the fellow will work collaboratively with other staff to provide exceptional legal services in multiple areas of Federal Indian law.

Our fast-paced office provides legal services on a variety of federal Indian law issues. The fellow will have the opportunity to assume a varied case load that may include: brief counsel and services to low income Indian individuals; state and federal court litigation; contract negotiation; advising tribal clients; developing and implementing constitutions, codes, and policies for tribal clients; making presentations; and ICWA related dependency cases.

While the fellow will be exposed to a variety of federal Indian laws, the fellow's focus will be primarily on Native American Indian Allotments.

From 1887 -1934, the federal government dismantled Indian reservations creating 20- to 160-acre parcels that were allotted to (placed in trust for) individual tribal members. The federal policy was to vastly reduce the communal land of tribes and assimilate Indians in to mainstream (i.e. white, Christian) society by making them farmers and ranchers. For much of the past ~130 years these Indian allotments were probated under state law resulting in multiple (sometimes 100s and even 1000s of) fractionated interest holders, leaving the land unusable since consent of a majority of interest holders is needed before the land can be developed or an interest holder can live on the land. The result is that many Indian allotments are unusable in any meaningful way the Indians who have an interest in them.

The fellow will assist with two main allotment-related projects: (1) work on a specific Indian allotment trespass case in the Bishop area that is ongoing; and (2) research and prepare a self-help guide for allottee interest holders to organize themselves and develop the allotment pursuant to a little-known provision in the American Indian Probate Reform Act.

The fellow may also travel to periodic ChangeLawyers Foundation events including annual Equity Summit, occasional Foundation Board meetings, and the annual Foundation Gala.

SAMPLE OF SUBSTANTIVE AREAS OF PRACTICE:

Land issues, Indian Child Welfare Act, Taxation issues, Wills and Probate, Jurisdictional issues, Tribal Justice System development, Tribal governance, Public benefits, Healthcare and senior/elder law issues.

About California ChangeLawyers Legal Fellowship Program

California ChangeLawyers was founded in 1989 by the State Bar of California as California Bar Foundation. In 2015, California Bar Foundation became an independent organization and in 2018, it changed names to California ChangeLawyers. Through the organization's history, its mission has never changed: build a better justice system for all Californians.

Launched in 2015, the ChangeLawyers Public Interest Legal Fellowship Program supports diverse rising 3Ls and recent law graduates who are committed to representing low-income and underserved populations in California. We fund leading California legal aid agencies who are committed to building diverse, inclusive staff environments to receive a summer or yearlong legal fellow.

Through this fellowship program, along with our diversity scholarships and grants, California ChangeLawyers is fostering diversity, equity, and inclusion in the legal profession and, by extension, the justice system as a whole. For more information about our fellowship program, please contact Jasjit Singh at jsingh@calbarfoundation.org.
