

CALL FOR SUBMISSIONS

The Public Land & Resources Law Review at the University of Montana is currently accepting submissions for our 48th volume, which will be published in Spring 2025. We accept pieces authored by practitioners and professors, and specifically encourage submissions by persons of color and members of indigenous and other minority communities.

For over 40 years, the Public Land & Resources Law Review has provided a platform for discussing critical issues related to public lands, natural resources, environmental protection, and federal Indian law. Our upcoming volume will delve into the most pressing legal challenges facing public lands, natural resources, the environment, and Indigenous tribes in the Western United States.

We are currently inviting submissions. Submissions may be emailed to plrlr@umontana.edu or submitted via Scholastica at <https://plrlr.scholasticahq.com/>. Articles are accepted on a rolling basis until November 1, 2024.

The Public Land & Resources Law Review is committed to supporting authors. If needed, we offer guidance on developing your submission and can facilitate co-authorship opportunities with experienced law review staff members. If you're interested in this support, please contact us at plrlr@umontana.edu.

Sincerely,

Ayden Auer & Meridian Wappett
